POPE LEO XIV

GRAND MASTER OF THE ORDER OF MALTA WELCOMES THE NEW PONTIFF

“A moment of grace for the universal Church.” With these words, the Grand Master of the Sovereign Order of Malta, Fra’ John T. Dunlap, welcomed the election of Pope Leo XIV, 267th Pope and Bishop of Rome. The white smoke appeared after the 4th ballot and designated Cardinal Robert Francis Prevost, 69, Prefect of the Dicastery for Bishops and Archbishop-Bishop emeritus of Chiclayo (Peru), as the successor of Saint Peter. Cardinal Protodeacon Dominique Mamberti pronounced the habemus papam. From the central loggia of St.

Peter’s Basilica Pope Leo XIV called for “a disarmed and disarming peace, a humble and preserving peace” and spoke of “a missionary Church, building bridges, dialogue, always open to receiving with open arms for everyone,” and emphasised “a synodal Church, a Church on the move, a Church that always strives for peace, that always strives for charity, that always strives to be close, especially to those who suffer.”

The Grand Master declared: “We welcome with gratitude the election of the new Holy Father, Successor of St. Peter and universal leader of the Catholic Church. In this moment of grace for the entire faithful community, I wish to express, on behalf of the Sovereign Order of Malta, our filial devotion and full adherence to Pope’s new Magisterium. We are particularly honoured to have welcomed the then Cardinal as a member of the Order of Malta, seeing this as a sign of a deeper spiritual connection. We pray that the Holy Spirit will illuminate his pontificate and give him strength and wisdom in his mission. From this moment, the Order, faithful to its religious vocation and humanitarian mission, assures the Holy Father of its constant support in defending human dignity, in serving the poor and promoting peace.”

Pope Robert Francis Prevost, the first Pontiff from the United States, was born on 14 September, 1955 in Chicago. He entered the Order of Saint Augustine in 1977. An expert on social and cultural issues, he gained a deep understanding of the Church in Latin America. Created cardinal by Pope Francis in the Consistory of 30 September 2023, Pope Leo XIV repeatedly recalled his predecessor in the words he spoke from the Loggia of Benedictions.

FESTIVALS MALTA LAUNCHES THE SUMMER FESTIVALS EVENTS PROGRAMME FOR 2025

Details have been announced regarding the festivals that will be organised by Festivals Malta between the months of May and July this year. These include the Ritmu Roots Festival, the Malta International Arts Festival, the Malta Jazz Festival, and Dance Festival Malta.

The Minister for the National Heritage, the Arts and Local Government, Dr Owen Bonnici, said, “This coming summer, through Festivals Malta, our country will host four prestigious festivals that strengthen our cultural identity and provide a platform for both local and international artists. The programme announced today not only enriches the summer season with high-level events, but also attracts thousands of people to our country, with direct benefits on both an economic and social level. I congratulate Festivals Malta for their vision and ongoing commitment to keeping culture alive and accessible to all.”

The Chairman of Festivals Malta, Aaron Zahra, said, “Every year, Festivals Malta presents a cultural calendar of the highest level for the summer months. The summer festivals not only offer a spectacle for local audiences during the summer days, but they also continue to strengthen our country’s position as a cultural destination for various visitors who purposely travel here in the summer months. As Festivals Malta, we are committed to continuing to work and produce festivals that strive for artistic excellence, and I am eager to kick off this year’s artistic calendar with the first festival starting this month – Ritmu Roots Festival.”

The CEO of Festivals Malta, Frans Agius, said, “The summer festivals offer an opportunity for Festivals Malta to present different artistic genres through four distinct festivals. In this way, we continue to strengthen our aim to offer a variety of cultural events to reach different audiences and make culture more accessible. I encourage our audiences to attend these events and to enjoy the experiences we have prepared for them.”

Ritmu Roots Festival will open the summer calendar of Festivals Malta with its third edition, taking place between May 21 and 24. The Artistic Director of Ritmu Roots Festival, Andrew Alamango, says that Ritmu is “a platform for the public where communities gather through music and participate in traditional community activities.” This year, the festival will include projects such as Il-Kummittiva, Għana (traditional Maltese music), boċċi (bowls), and international artists such as Tarta Relena, Pliri Ntaxej, and Vincent Moon.

The Malta International Arts Festival will return between June 13 and 22 with ten days of multidisciplinary events including dance, music, theatre, and visual art exhibitions. Notable projects in this year’s programme include a concert by the Malta Philharmonic Orchestra, Underground Valletta, M.A.D. – Music and Dance, Music Painted by Caravaggio, and Boċċi the Musical in collaboration with Teatru Malta. “The Malta International Arts Festival delivers a dynamic and contemporary programme staged in remarkable heritage sites, making Malta's rich cultural legacy an essential element of each event and ensuring a truly distinctive festival experience," concluded Artistic Director Ruben Zahra.

The Malta Jazz Festival will include an eclectic programme of events with a celebrated line-up including artists such as Michael Mayo, Rebecca Martin, Peter Bernstein, Knowler, and many more. Artistic Director Sandro Zerafa explains, "With a lineup ranging from the swinging sounds of NY jazz icon Peter Bernstein to the explosive duo from LA, Knowler to the folk-infused sounds of Rebecca Martin, the Malta Jazz Festival, now in its 35th year, keeps its promise of allying eclecticism, integrity and excellence." This festival will be held between July 7 and 12.

Dance Festival Malta, taking place between July 24 and 27, will connect local artists with various European artists by offering them a platform to discuss, share, and enhance their artistic work through masterclasses and specialised workshops. ## MANOEL ISLAND FROM ABANDONED TO RESTORED AND MAGNIFICENT

MIDI's €43 million investment will ensure the preservation of Manoel Island's previously neglected buildings

POLVERISTA AFTER

Once left to decay, the historic buildings of Manoel Island are being transformed through a remarkable restoration effort led by MIDI plc. With an initial €13 million investment, the company is ensuring the long-term preservation of structures that form an essential part of Malta's cultural legacy.

Over the past 20 years, a comprehensive programme of studies, planning, and conservation has been underway on Manoel Island, making it one of Malta's largest privately funded heritage restoration projects. At the heart of this initiative is the iconic Fort Manoel, which following the departure of the British was left in a state of neglect for many years and subsequently damaged by vandalism, pilferage and neglect. This magnificent Fort is today fully restored, and the public can enjoy the beauty of the meticulous restoration undertaken by MIDI.

New life was also breathed into Couvre Porte, the parade grounds and the Polverista. Renovation works on the Chapel of St Anthony of Padua are also complete, since it was partly destroyed following a direct hit during World War II. Works were also carried out on the counterscarps which form part of the outer fortifications of the Fort Manoel.

ST ANTHONY'S CHAPEL AFTER RESTORATION

St George's funerary chapel has also been meticulously restored. During the restoration process, two fragmented but original tombstones which were found strewn inside the chapel and have been restored and mounted within. Interestingly, this ancient chapel formed part of the Lazzaretto quarantine hospital on Manoel Island, along with the recently restored cattle shed where livestock used to be kept in quarantine.

MIDI's revised masterplan also expands its heritage commitment to include other significant sites such as the Lazzaretto, the Customs House, the Admiralty Canteen, and the Rempec Building, a structure which was not officially scheduled for protection but recognised for its unique architectural value. This second phase of restoration of heritage buildings on Manoel Island will see an additional investment of €30 million.

BARRACKS AFTER RESTORATION

Retaining, preserving and breathing new life into our heritage

The decision by MIDI to preserve and breathe new life into these heritage buildings, while seamlessly incorporating them in the new masterplan for Manoel Island, will now form part of a heritage trail which will link the whole of Manoel Island.

MIDI's vision is not only about preserving the past but also about integrating heritage into the future of Manoel Island. These historic structures will sit prominently within the public open spaces which together with the heritage buildings occupy more than 80% of MIDI's concession.

The revised masterplan creates a living link across the island—one that honours Malta's rich history while offering a unique destination for future generations.

The Megalithic Temples of Malta Were Built by Stone Age Overachievers

Imagine standing on a sun-drenched Mediterranean island, your shadow stretching across ancient stones that have witnessed more than 5,000 years of history. Malta's megalithic temples rise from the earth like silent sentinels, mysterious and awe-inspiring.

These prehistoric structures are so massive, so intricate, that even today, scientists and visitors alike are left breathless by the question: how did Stone Age people, without wheels or metal tools, build something so extraordinary? The answer is a tale of human brilliance, determination, and the unbreakable bond between people and their land.

The megalithic temples of Malta are among the oldest free-standing monuments in the world, predating even the Egyptian pyramids and Stonehenge. Built between 3600 and 2500 BCE, these structures are a testament to a civilization lost in time, yet leagues ahead in ingenuity. The sheer size of the stones used—some weighing over 20 tons—raises eyebrows and ignites imaginations. Unlike other ancient cultures, the builders of Malta left no written records, so each stone, each carving, is a puzzle piece in a grand archaeological mystery. The more we learn, the more we are amazed by the skills and vision of these Stone Age overachievers.

One of Malta's crowning jewels is Ġgantija, a temple complex on the island of Gozo. The name itself means "giant's tower" in Maltese, fueled by local legends that giants must have built these structures. But there were no giants—only determined humans with a dream. The temple's massive limestone blocks, stacked and fitted with astonishing precision, form winding corridors and ceremonial rooms. Even today, you can see the ancient post holes, altars, and mysterious spiral carvings that hint at rituals long forgotten. Walking through Ġgantija, you can almost feel the presence of the builders, their sweat and hope frozen in stone.

Perched on a cliff overlooking the deep blue Mediterranean, the twin temples of Ħaġar Qim and Mnajdra are wonders of both architecture and astronomy. Scholars have discovered that Mnajdra's doorway aligns with the rising sun on the spring and autumn equinoxes, a Stone Age calendar built from rock. It's hard not to be moved by the thought of ancient people, watching the sky, marking the seasons, and weaving their lives around the celestial dance. The precision of these alignments speaks to a sophisticated understanding of nature, one that fills us with respect for our distant ancestors.

It's almost unbelievable: the Maltese megaliths were constructed before the invention of the wheel or the use of metal tools on the islands. Yet, these builders managed to quarry, transport, and shape enormous limestone blocks, sometimes moving them across rough, hilly terrain. Archaeologists believe they used round stones as primitive rollers and simple levers to shift the megaliths. Imagine the teamwork, the patience, and the backbreaking labor required. The absence of advanced tools makes their achievement all the more staggering—a testament to human determination and creativity in the face of daunting obstacles.

The Maltese temples are not just impressive for their size and age—they are also richly decorated, reflecting a culture that valued beauty and symbolism. Inside, you'll find intricate carvings of spirals, plants, and animals, as well as mysterious "fat lady" figurines that are believed to represent fertility. These artistic touches suggest that the temples were more than mere shelters or tombs. They were sacred spaces, filled with music, rituals, and perhaps laughter. The art left behind is a whisper from the past, reminding us that the builders were not just engineers but also dreamers and artists.

From corbelled roofs to precisely balanced stones, the engineering techniques used in Malta's megaliths still baffle modern experts. The structures have survived thousands of years of wind, rain, and even earthquakes. Some scholars marvel at the three-lobed layouts, the careful orientation to the sun and stars, and the use of interlocking stones that ensured stability. The temples' durability isn't accidental—it's the result of careful planning and trial-and-error experimentation. These ancient engineers understood their materials and environment in ways that continue to inspire today's architects and builders.

Despite decades of excavation, Malta's megaliths continue to guard their secrets. What inspired these Stone Age people to build on such a scale? What rituals did they perform within the shadowy chambers? Some archaeologists believe the temples were dedicated to a mother-goddess cult, while others suspect they served as astronomical observatories or healing centers. New discoveries, like ancient animal bones, carved idols, and mysterious underground chambers, regularly challenge our assumptions. The sense of mystery keeps the world's scientists and curious travelers coming back for more.

A SAD CHAPTER IN THE HISTORY OF MALTESE EMIGRATION

Here is a photograph of immigrant Maltese children in Western Australia. It was taken at Bindoon Boys Town in 1952. The children were pupils of Catholic Agricultural College Bindoon, a Christian Brothers' school for day and residential students that is known as Bindoon Boys' Town. They were not allowed to wear shoes or speak Maltese. They were forced to work in fields and some of them abused instead of given the proper education as they were promised.

Malta was a source of immigrant boys in Australia. Some groups, all boys, came from Malta during and after World War II. Malta was one of the most heavily bombed places during the War. The Island was near starvation when the Allies finally broke the Axis blockade. Both the Italians and Germans battered the Island for nearly 2 years. I am not sure who organized the migrant groups to Australia. The Axis bombing killed many civilians. The Island was terribly battered, adversely affecting the local economy. I assume that the migrant boys lost their parents during the bombing. Here is a photograph of immigrant Maltese children in Western Australia. The children are at the Bindoon Boys Town in 1952. The children were pupils of Catholic Agricultural College Bindoon, a Christian Brothers' school for day and residential students that is known as Bindoon Boys' Town. Bindoon is a small town located 87 km north of Perth. The school began with a group of about 32 boys who were transferred from Clontarf to Bindoon in 1942 during World War II. After the War, Bindoon became home for many migrant boys from both the United Kingdom and Malta. Migration from the UK ceased in 1957 and from Malta in 1965.

TRAFFIC JAM

Maltese living abroad who visit Malta regularly confess that the traffic situation in Malta is getting from bad to worse. They all say that Malta experiences significant traffic congestion, particularly during peak hours and in urban areas. This is due to a combination of factors, including a high number of vehicles on the road, limited road infrastructure, and challenges in improving public transportation. Key issues and challenges:

- Congestion:

Malta has a high traffic density, especially during peak hours (6:00-9:00 AM and 4:00-7:00 PM) on weekdays and 9:00 AM - 1:00 PM on Saturdays, leading to delays and frustration for drivers.

- Infrastructure limitations:

The road network in Malta is relatively small and was not designed to accommodate the current level of traffic, leading to bottlenecks and delays.

- Lack of public transport:

While Malta is actively trying to improve its public transportation system, it still lags behind many other European countries, with a high reliance on private vehicles.

- Driving culture:

Some reports suggest that Maltese drivers are known for their chaotic driving style, which contributes to the overall congestion.

- Cost:

The cost of traffic congestion in Malta is substantial, estimated at millions of euros annually due to wasted time and fuel, as well as potential impacts on the environment.

In summary: Malta's traffic problem is a complex one, with a variety of factors contributing to the congestion. Addressing this issue requires a comprehensive, long-term approach that involves improving public transport, expanding road infrastructure, and encouraging alternative modes of transportation, according to an article on The Malta Independent.

Chartered Ships which carried Maltese Migrants to Australia and Canada

The final adieu, November 1950

Regular shipping for migrants to Australia really began in April 1948 when the ASTURIAS left Malta, on April 23. In fact she had made a previous trip, on November 20, 1947, when one hundred emigrants had left on her, but many of them were returning emigrants who had paid anything from £58 to £80 to get as far as Melbourne. However from April 1948 to August 1952 the Asturias made fifteen trips to Australia thus earning for herself the sixth place among those ships which made most trips from Malta to Australia.

The undisputed primacy goes to the aptly named SYDNEY which between December 15, 1951, and February 13, 1966, made thirty-nine trips between Malta and Australia. When the COLUMBIA carried on her 1,075 migrants, that was considered then as the largest group ever carried to Australia in one voyage. The Columbia left on November 21, 1949. On that day Mr Cole expressed his obvious satisfaction at practically solving the problem of providing a reliable shipping service for emigrants.

The beginning of a new wave of Maltese migration to Canada as it entered Gibraltar Harbour on June 19, 1948.

This is not to say that Mr Cole had solved the shipping problem to the satisfaction of everybody. While it was true that the Maltese Government had successfully obtained enough ships to carry those who wished to emigrate, there were complaints about some ships and about their sea worthiness and the kind of accommodation provided on board. Complaints appeared in the Maltese press about the Columbia. Although during question time in the Legislative Assembly Mr Cole had stated that the Columbia's trip was normal he did admit that during her journey three babies, only a few months old, had died at sea.

On April 26, 1949, the ship called MISR took to Australia seven hundred Maltese passengers. The ship had been built in the U.S.A. only six years before and was now owned by the Soc. Misr de Navigation Maritime of Alexandria, Egypt. In 1947 the Misr had embarked on her first voyage to Australia carrying on board a number of passengers who had originated from the Middle East. When the Maltese arrived on the Misr and disembarked first in Melbourne then in Sydney, some sections of the Australian Press had taken them for Levantines. Once on dry land the Maltese themselves complained about the accommodation they had been given in common dormitories. Complaints reached Malta about the ship OCEAN VICTORY which had left on February 26, 1950. On her were 1,024 emigrants and these included forty-two babies, one hundred and sixty children between the ages of one and five years, and one hundred and eighteen between five and eleven years. Three qualified nurses were in charge of the children. Labour representatives in the Legislative Assembly asked for a discussion on the accommodation provided on some of the ships being chartered by Mr Cole's department.

Labour politician, Mr N. Laiviera, claimed that he had received letters from emigrants he knew who had bitterly complained about conditions on board the Ocean Victory. Mr Laiviera did admit that better accommodation meant more expensive fares. His colleague, Mr D. Mintoff, wanted to know if there was any truth in the rumour that a child had died. (9) Mr Mintoff quoted from the Australian newspaper, The Daily Telegraph of April 3, 1950, which said that customs officials had described the Ocean Victory as a hell-ship. The captain himself admitted that a baby boy of ten months had died and so did another of sixteen months. Many of the passengers claimed they had suffered from dysentery while their linen was changed only once. Mr Anthony Cassar said that rain seeped into their sleeping quarters and Mrs Mary Grech, a mother with three girls and a boy, said that they lived on boiled potatoes and spaghetti. (10)

Complaints were also raised about the ship FLORENTIA which made three trips from Malta to Australia between December 15, 1950, and August 21, 1951. She had been built in Dunbarton, Scotland, in 1914. Some of those who travelled on the ship felt that the ship was not fit to cross the Indian Ocean, especially between May and September when the monsoons were likely to occur. One trip created quite a stir. The Florentia was expected in Grand Harbour, Valletta, on April. She was to carry 1,039 passengers but these were kept waiting for a number of days until she finally made port eleven days later.

The trip to Australia was uneventful, but chaos was let loose when she finally berthed at North Wharf, Melbourne, on May 31. Many relatives had been anxiously waiting for a very long time and tempers were short. On disembarking, one immigrant decided to run towards his relatives while his luggage was still being inspected by immigration officials. He was soon caught, but other waiting relatives and friends joined the fray. In the fracas that ensued three immigration officials were hurt and so were two Maltese. Five were arrested. One was accused of causing bodily to an immigration official while the other cases deferred.

An official comment from the Maltese Department of Emigration said about the incident "The man in question was only trying to kiss his mother before customs formalities had been finished. He had been already warned to wait, but he insisted on rushing to his mother. The other Maltese were all waiting on the quay. None of the arriving immigrants were involved".

It was obvious that the Maltese Government could not ignore the criticism in Malta and abroad about some of the chartered ships, particularly the OCEAN VICTORY AND THE OCEAN TRIUMPH.. that if the decision to hire both ships had been solely on his own he would have never decided in favour of were made to him during the voyage. He had sent a telegram to Malta expressing his favourable impression about the behaviour of the Maltese and that he thought that they would make good settlers.

Nisa, Jghannu - Women, Chanting

Since the early 20th century, and particularly in post-war Malta, the public practice of traditional chant, ghana (Maltese traditional folk singing), has been dominated by men. This context is mainly reserved to male-dominated environments such as bars, tea shops and każini or social clubs, where ghannejja (traditional Maltese folk singers) would get together at the end of the day to verbalise and process the events of their daily life.

Typically improvised four-line stanzas, traditional singing is usually accompanied by the sound of guitars, where words and sung poetry serve as a catharsis; both individual and collective. Saying what needs to be said, ghannejja would gather in public and sing their hearts out to express themselves.

Troubadours of renown are surrounded by dilettanti (aficionados) who document, record and transmit their verses, passing on the legacy of their bravado. Furthermore, from the middle of the 20th century, male singers and guitarists were extensively recorded on the national radio Rediffusion forging their words on magnetic tape for posterity. By the eighties, ghana became more and more associated with male gatherings with short-fused practitioners who would often engage in scuffles.

Performances of ghana by women, on the other hand, are hard to come by, as it would mainly take place behind closed doors, at home, or occasionally allowed within these male-dominated contexts. Therefore, female singing is associated with domestic chores like clothes washing, where supposedly women traded verses from roof to roof. Women's voices are conspicuously absent when it comes to recorded material from the 20th century.

Nisa, Jghannu* proposes a fresh encounter with ghana through women's perspective. It aims to encourage women of different ages to come together and express themselves using the traditional format, contributing by way of musicality, creative use of words and poetry, and choreography for the delivery of self-expression and social catharsis. Nisa, Jghannu* is being proposed as an ongoing collective where female individuals can bring their forte to the table and contribute to a collective project.

HISTORY OF MALTESE EMIGRATION TO AUSTRALIA

SS SKAUBRYN - THE LAST VOYAGE TO AUSTRALIA FROM MALTA

The day the ship caught fire
1958-2014

67th anniversary of a dream trip gone wrong

The crossing to Australia was an emotional time for the 1,100 passengers -169 of them Maltese - on the Norwegian migrant ship, the Skaubryn. They were excited about the opportunities in their new homes, tearful about the lives they had left behind. And for many of them, it was also a frightening experience, their first long sea journey. Who could have imagined that it would end in disaster. On March 31, 1958, the Skaubryn caught fire in the Indian Ocean and issued an SOS at 11.30 p.m.

Maltese survivors in Aden, April 1958

Fate was kind. There was a vessel nearby, the City of Sydney, which rushed to assist the stricken vessel, getting there within two hours and saving all the passengers and 180 crew. It took four terrifying hours to get all of them off the burning ship. It later transferred the survivors to a liner, the Roma, which dropped them off in Aden, where they stayed till transport could be organised to Australia. On board with the migrants was Fr Spiru Tabone, now nearly 90, who was asked to accompany the Maltese contingent as their spiritual advisor by Fr Philip Calleja, head of the Emigrants' Commission.

"He knew that I yearned to go to Australia to see my family - although my roots in Malta were too deep to tempt me to emigrate. No one else was keen so I got the opportunity," Fr Tabone said, his cloudy eyes turned away, as though trying to glimpse his faded memories. "I had travelled before but never to Australia. I was not afraid of the sea. The sea was very rough at times but that is what you have to expect. I was brought up in Kalkara, near the sea so I know its fury." He paused for a long time, his hands shaking slightly, trying to remember life on board. "My duties on board were not too onerous. All I used to have to do was celebrate Mass, really. I tended to keep to myself. I did not socialise very much," he said. It is not clear whether he has forgotten the dramatic events of 50 years ago - or whether he prefers not to remember them. He talks about that night without any emotion. "I remember that we were all woken up by the crew. We were in the middle of nowhere. We were taken off the boat onto the City of Sydney. I don't remember being scared. We were not even aware of the fire until we left the vessel," he shrugged.

They were lucky to escape with their lives but once the survivors got over their shock - and gratitude at being alive - they had to face the grim reality that they had lost everything they owned. They arrived in Australia with nothing but the clothes in which they stood. The stories in the newspapers of the time captured the extent of the human drama: One of the survivors was Carmel Calleja, who had left Gudja with his wife and 10 children. They arrived without even a toy between them.

The plight of the Skaubryn survivors touched many hearts. The Maltese government promptly sent £50 to each survivor aged over 20, £25 to those aged between 14 and 20, and £10 to those under 14. The Australian government helped all the survivors, providing A$20,000 in all, while other philanthropic organisations also pitched in with food, clothes and money. It was not only physical goods they need but also spiritual support. The Emigrants' Commission, through Mgr Calleja, organised recording sessions so that relatives in Malta could send messages to Australia, also keeping those in Malta up to date with what was happening there.

The Intergovernmental Committee for European Migration (ICEDM) organised a free cable for each family as well as free aerogram forms to be sent to relatives. It also organised free transportation from Germany of personal belongings from relatives and friends. Fr Tabone stayed in Australia until June 1958, returning on the MS Flaminia, much against his better wishes.... "I was obviously reluctant to travel by ship again and I asked to return by air but the ICEM could not accommodate my request as the contract only provided passage by air. I had no choice... "I have been back to Australia eight times since then to visit my siblings ... but always by air," he smiled. Once back in Malta, Fr Tabone went back to parish work. The years sped by, one of the highlights being a visit to Rome in 1996 to celebrate the 50th anniversary of the ordination of Pope John Paul II, during which the Pope invited other priests from around the world ordained in 1946. He has been at the Dar Tal-Kleru in Birkirkara for over a decade. He politely ends the interview, apologising that he was not able to remember more and ambles back to the chapel, where a shaft of sunlight pierces the silence. A door opens and shuts and the aroma of food wafts down the corridor. Life goes on.

The story of the Maltese bound for Australia on board the Norwegian ship SS Skaubryn occupies a unique place since it was the only occasion when a number of emigrants were for a time in great danger. This ship was built in 1951 and made six journeys between Malta and Australia from 1952 to her last journey in 1958. On that fateful journey the ship carried 169 passengers from Malta while in all she had on her 1,082 passengers with 208 members of the crew. Among the passengers were 200 children and 40 babies. The Maltese had their own chaplain with them, Fr S. Tabone from Kalkara. He was going to visit his two brothers who had left Malta eight years before. The Skaubryn left Grand Harbour on March 22, 1958, and after a short stop at Port Said the ship passed Aden to enter the vastness of the Indian Ocean. That ocean was incredibly calm and the ship continued on her way in a very relaxed atmosphere. On Monday, March 31, captain Alf Haakon Feste ordered his crew and passengers to meet on deck at 2.30 pm for an emergency drill. Some of the people on board complained at this interference as they preferred their siesta at that time.

Once the drill was over some of the passengers went to the hall where a band was playing with a few dancers on the floor. It was very calm and very hot. As darkness fell many went to their cabins for the night's sleep. All one could hear was the regular humming of the ship's engines. Fr Tabone decided that he too needed a good sleep because he had to be up by 5.00 am. But suddenly the lights in his cabin dimmed and then there was complete darkness. The priest could hear people moving excitedly. His first thought was that some passengers had decided to go on deck to watch the Soviet satellite Sputnik as they had been told that there was a good chance of seeing the satellite from their position in the ocean. The reason for the commotion was that the engine room was on fire. According to the report given by Captain Feste the fire was caused by a misunderstanding between two members of the crew when they caused oil from an open line in the engine room to spurt on hot exhaust pipes. In a very short time all passengers on board were told which lifeboats they had to take. This efficiency saved the lives of all concerned except for an elderly German who died of a heart attack.

The Skaubryn left Malta on the last day of March 1958, having embarked 169 men, women and children at Valletta. About 3 days out of Aden, in the Indian Ocean, fire swept the decks from the direction of the engine room and soon the vessel was engulfed in flames. Passengers were assisted lifeboats, the ship was abandoned and soon sank. Some passengers were rescued by the 'CITY OF SYDNEY', a tanker and a tug.

Returned to Aden, the passengers completed their journey to Australia on "Roma" and "Orsova!". 1 one lost their life in direct consequence of the fire.

Although the Maltese Islands never had more than 400,000 native inhabitants, it is estimated that the number of Maltese livings around the world is many hundreds of thousands higher. That is because over the past two centuries thousands of Maltese left their homeland in search of a better future elsewhere.

In today's terms, they would have been 'economic migrants' and surely not 'illegal immigrants' because their mass migration from Malta was not only organised but also encouraged, especially in the 1960's when it was a handy solution to Malta's economic problems at its dawn of Independence in 1964. Many of these went to English-speaking countries such as the USA, Canada and Australia. A century earlier they had just ventured in the Mediterranean and Maltese communities can today be traced in Tunisia, Gibraltar, Libya and Egypt. When pondering on issues related to the wave of illegal immigrants hitting the Maltese shores, the Maltese people surely know what it feels like to have to leave your mother country in search of a better life far away.
