FROM MAC SA NEWSLETTER - April is a meaningful time across many cultures and faiths, marked by renewal, reflection, and connection. From Easter and Orthodox Easter, to Songkran and Vaisakhi, this month brings together diverse traditions that celebrate new beginnings, gratitude, and community. These occasions provide a valuable opportunity for the aged care sector to deepen cultural understanding and create inclusive environments where older people feel respected, heard, and connected to their cultural identity. At the same time, ANZAC Day invites us to reflect on service, sacrifice, and shared history. It is also a moment to recognise the diverse backgrounds and contributions of those who have served, and to honour the many cultural perspectives on remembrance and respect.

Across our communities, older people carry rich cultural stories, traditions, and lived experiences. By embracing these, we not only enhance wellbeing but also strengthen connection, belonging, and dignity in care. MAC remains committed to supporting the sector with culturally informed guidance, practical resources, and opportunities for learning and reflection. Together, we continue to build a more inclusive, responsive, and compassionate aged care system.

This April, we encourage you to take time to:

- Celebrate cultural diversity
- Listen and share stories
- Create meaningful moments of connection

Together, let us continue to support older people to live with dignity, respect, and a strong sense of belonging.

CHILDREN'S THERAPY ROOM INAUGURATED AT FONDAZZJONI SEBĦ A STRONG AND ENDURING PARTNERSHIP BETWEEN SEBĦ AND THE CHILDREN IN NEED FOUNDATION

Fondazzjoni Sebħ inaugurated a newly refurbished children's therapy room, on Tuesday 7 April 2026, marking an important milestone in the development of a comprehensive, trauma-informed system of care. What began in 2023 as a dream has since evolved into a model now recognised as a benchmark of excellence within residential services.

Through the Mindful@Home project, the Children in Need Foundation (CiN) joined forces with Sebħ to create a therapeutic care service within Sebħ's residential homes. This service is built by a shared vision: to ensure that children in care receive timely, consistent, and professional therapeutic support in a space where they feel safe.

The therapy room has been thoughtfully designed with children in-care in mind. Soft, large curtains allow the space to be adapted during each session, giving children the freedom to shape their surroundings in a way that makes them feel most comfortable; making it become their space, where they can begin to feel at ease and open up.

The CiN Foundation funds all therapy sessions for children in the care of Fondazzjoni Sebħ, including the employment of three multidisciplinary psychotherapists and the provision of specialised therapeutic services, through this initiative.

“This early intervention model has enabled professionals to better understand and respond to the complex needs of each child,” said Ms Alexia Baldacchino, Sebħ Children's Services Senior Manager, who manages this service. She added that through close collaboration, a multidisciplinary approach placing trauma-informed care at the heart of everyday practice has been established. “Children who had previously resisted therapy began to engage, building trust through familiarity with therapists and gradually overcoming the stigma often associated with seeking help. This holistic framework has proven highly effective in supporting emotional healing and long-term well-being.”

Episcopal Vicar for Diaconia Fr Martin Micallef commended the strong collaboration between the two entities, which has significantly enhanced the quality of life of the children in care. What was once an ordinary room has been transformed into a nurturing therapeutic hub – a space that reflects care, dignity, and hope.

“Recognising that healing extends beyond the service itself, CiN deepened its commitment by investing in the environment where therapy takes place,” stated Mr Daniel Abela, Founder and Chairperson of CiN Foundation. He added, “Understanding the profound influence of space on emotional safety and openness, CiN undertook an ambitious refurbishment project within Sebħ's premises created by professionals. This was made possible thanks to the support of organisations such as Regine Sixt Children's Aid Foundation, Sixt Malta, Malta Enterprise, and many others who contributed financially or through goods and services. This space is a sanctuary where children feel safe to express themselves and begin their journey toward healing.”

Ms Kimberly Barbara, representing the Regine Sixt Children's Aid Foundation, remarked: “The work of the CiN Foundation and Sebħ has moved me profoundly. What they have built through the Mindful@Home programme – placing psychotherapists and family therapists directly into the daily lives of children in care, offering them consistency, presence, and professional support – is exactly the kind of thoughtful approach I believe in wholeheartedly.”

Mr George Gregory, Malta Enterprise CEO, mentioned that “at Malta Enterprise, we believe that sustainable economic development goes hand in hand with social responsibility. Our contribution to CiN Foundation in 2024 reflects our commitment to supporting initiatives that create meaningful, long-term impact within our communities. The inauguration of this therapy room is a powerful example of how collaboration can help transform lives. This will provide children with a safe and supportive environment where they can heal, grow, and build a brighter future.”

Ms Yvonne Mallia, Director of Fondazzjoni Sebħ, concluded: “This project would not have been possible without the unwavering dedication and generosity of CiN, who mobilised support from benefactors and brought our vision to life. Special thanks also go to EbejerBonnici Architects, who managed the project and contributed through sponsorships. Words cannot fully capture the depth of our gratitude. Through everyone’s efforts, Fondazzjoni Sebħ continues to enhance its services, creating opportunities for healing and brighter, more hopeful futures for the children who need them most.”

The Thorny Legacy:
A History of the Prickly Pear in Malta

The prickly pear, known in Maltese as bajtra tax-xewk (literally "the thorny fig"), is as synonymous with the Maltese landscape as limestone walls and blue shutters. While it looks like a native fixture of the Mediterranean, its history is one of colonial travel and botanical endurance.

Origins and Arrival Despite its deep roots in Maltese culture, the prickly pear (Opuntia ficus-indica) is not indigenous to Europe. It originated in Mexico, where it was a staple for the Aztecs.

The 16th Century Pipeline: The plant was brought to the Old World by Spanish explorers returning from the Americas.

Introduction to Malta: It is widely believed that the Knights of St. John introduced the plant to the Maltese islands in the late 15th or early 16th century.

Climate Match: Malta’s arid climate, poor soil, and intense sunshine provided the perfect environment for the cactus to thrive without any human intervention.

A Multipurpose Tool Historically, the prickly pear was much more than just a source of fruit for the Maltese; it was a strategic agricultural asset.

1. Natural Fortification The Knights and local farmers realised that the dense, thorny pads made for impenetrable hedges. They were planted around fields and coastal towers to act as a deterrent against invaders and to protect livestock from wandering.

2. Windbreaks and Soil Retention In a landscape prone to heavy winds and soil erosion, the sturdy root systems and heavy pads of the Opuntia served as effective windbreaks, shielding more delicate crops like grapes and tomatoes.

3. Fodder and Dye During periods of drought when grass was scarce, farmers would carefully peel the pads to feed their cattle and goats. Additionally, the plant was a host for the cochineal insect, which was historically used to produce valuable crimson dye.

The Fruit: "The Poor Man's Food" For centuries, the fruit was a vital source of nutrition for the rural population. Because it grew wild and required no water, it was often dubbed "the food of the poor."

The Varieties: Malta hosts three main colours of the fruit:

L-Abjad: (White/Green) Often considered the sweetest.

Is-Safar: (Yellow/Orange) The most common variety.

L-Aħmar: (Red/Purple) Valued for its striking colour and antioxidant properties.

Harvesting Traditions: Traditionally, the fruit is harvested at dawn when the tiny, hair-like thorns (glochids) are dampened by dew, making them less likely to fly off and irritate the skin.

Modern Significance

Today, the prickly pear has moved from a survival food to a gourmet ingredient. It is a primary component in Bajtra, a popular traditional Maltese liqueur. You will also find it used in jams, artisanal soaps, and even skincare products due to the high Vitamin E content in its seeds.

While it is no longer the primary defensive line for the island, it remains a protected feature of the Maltese countryside, symbolising resilience and the ability to find sweetness in a harsh environment.

"Iż-żmien isajru l-bajtar"

This literally translates to: "Time ripens the figs."

English Equivalent to: All in good time / Patience is a virtue

This is one of the most beloved and frequently used proverbs in Malta, reflecting a Mediterranean patience rooted in the natural cycles of agriculture.

1. The Core Meaning

It means that patience is a virtue and that things will happen when the time is right. It is a reminder that some processes cannot be rushed, and trying to force an outcome before its time will only lead to disappointment.

Natural Progression: Just as a prickly pear or a fig needs the summer sun to become sweet, life's problems often need time to resolve themselves.

Maturity: It can also refer to people, suggesting that wisdom and character develop only with age and experience.

2. Usage and Nuance

This phrase is typically used to comfort someone who is feeling anxious or impatient:

To someone waiting for news: "Don't worry about the results yet; is-żmien isajru l-bajtar."

Regarding a difficult situation: "The conflict will settle down eventually. Give it time; is-żmien isajru l-bajtar."

About a young person: "He's a bit reckless now, but he'll grow up. Is-żmien isajru l-bajtar."

3. Cultural Context

Figs and prickly pears (bajtar tax-xewk) are iconic symbols of the Maltese summer. They are famous for being hard or sour until they reach that perfect moment of ripeness under the intense July and August heat. The proverb draws on the lived experience of every Maltese person waiting for the harvest—you cannot force a fig to be sweet today if it is meant to be sweet tomorrow.

JEREMY AZZOPARDI

It has been an honour to serve as an intern at the High Commission of Malta in the United Kingdom over the past month!

I am very grateful to High Commissioner, HE Prof Stephen Montefort, and Senior Public Affairs Lead, Nerissa Sultana, for this incredible experience at Malta House. This was a unique opportunity to help advance Malta's foreign policy work and to explore the world of diplomacy. Alongside colleague Laura Couvet, I contributed to the Public Affairs, Commonwealth, Culture, Events Management, and Social Media briefs. From welcoming guests at weekly courtesy calls, to attending high-level diplomatic meetings, some highlights of my experience include

Shadowing for Malta at high-level The Commonwealth meetings, including at the 'Commonwealth Forum on Sustainable Sovereign Debt'

Meeting senior Maltese officials including Vanessa Frazier, the UN Special Representative for Children and Armed Conflict, and Paul Zahra, Permanent Secretary at Malta's Ministry for Finance Formulating the High Commission's social media strategy, creating multimedia content, and increasing engagement. Contributing to the organisation of diaspora events and panel discussions through photography, speechwriting, and logistics coordination. Malta was a British Crown Colony until independence in 1964. The United Kingdom is one of Malta's most important historical, political, cultural, and economic relationships and both countries continue to enjoy a constructive partnership.

CHILDREN – VICTIMS OF WAR

The exact number of children killed in Malta during World War II is difficult to pinpoint with absolute certainty, as historical records often group civilian casualties. However, research into the casualty lists of the Siege of Malta provides a clear picture of the scale of the tragedy.

Total Civilian Context: Between 1940 and 1943, Malta was one of the most heavily bombed places on Earth.

Total Civilian Deaths: Approximately 1,581 people.

Total Civilian Injuries: Approximately 3,780 people.

Estimated Child Fatalities: While there is no single official "child-only" tally from the colonial administration of the time, historians and memorial researchers (such as those documenting the Malta Civilian Casualty List) have identified hundreds of minors among the dead.

Documented Child Deaths: Historical analysis suggests that roughly 400 to 500 children were killed.

Notable Incidents: Many of these deaths occurred during "direct hits" on civilian shelters. For example, the bombing of the Hal Safi shelter in April 1942 and the tragedy at the Birgu (Vittoriosa) ditch shelter resulted in the deaths of entire families, including many infants and school-aged children.

Factors Affecting the Numbers: Age Categorisation: In the 1940s, "child" was often defined as anyone under 16, though some records used different age brackets.

Indirect Deaths: The figures above generally count deaths from direct enemy action (bombing). They often exclude children who died from malnutrition (due to the "Black Famine" of 1942) or diseases like typhoid and infantile paralysis, which spiked due to the unsanitary conditions in overcrowded rock shelters.

The names of these children are today commemorated at the War Memorial in Floriana and within the National War Museum in Valletta, which serves as a sobering reminder of the heavy price paid by the Maltese civilian population.

MALTESE CULTURE

The Maltese History

The History, Culture and Traditions of Malta and the Maltese islands is rich and extensive, dating back to the dawn of man, with early stone age farmers believed to have inhabited the islands from 5200BC. Malta has been invaded and changed rule many times in its history with each new wave of settlers leaving their mark on the island. It has been under the rule of the Arabs, The Romans, the Knights of St John, The Normans, the French and most recently British. One of the most significant events in Malta took place during the Norman rule, when St Paul shipwrecked on the island, he subsequently brought Christianity to the Island which is still prevalent in the country with nearly 90% of the population being Christian in some denomination. In 1964 Malta regained its independence from British rule and joined the European union as an independent county in 2004.

NATIONAL IDENTITY

The Maltese Islands have been invaded and inhabited by so many nationalities that the islanders themselves now have vary varied heritage. Cultural Influences are evident from Phoenicians, Romans, Greeks, Normans, Sicilians, Swabians, Aragonese, Castilian, the Knights, and the British. Northern Africans also contributed strongly to the development to Malta's history and official language. Most Maltese identify as being European and although they have strong ties with Europe and the European Union there is a strong sense of National Identity and pride in their new-found independence.

CULTURE

Malta offers a lot more than Sun, Sea and Sand, although there is plenty of that to enjoy. The museums, exhibits and religious temples coupled with the beautiful scenery makes Malta a unique travel destination even for the most seasoned of explorers. Once you have had your fill of the tourist attractions you can move on to a more authentic side of Malta by walking down the narrow side streets of Mdina, join in with the locals and follow the bands in the village fiesta, and if music is your things there are plenty of traditional Ghana bands for your to watch in the café's as well as contemporary artists.

TRADITIONS

Malta is a highly traditional and religious country and these beliefs are imparted on the young from birth. Babies are usually baptised soon after birth, in most cases as Roman Catholics or other Christian. The Christening ceremony is one that is celebrated with friends, and family and lots of food, not dissimilar to the size of a wedding party, the Maltese take their Christenings seriously and they are not quiet affairs. On a child's first Birthday they take part in a tradition known as il-quccija, during this time the child is encouraged to crawl or toddle towards a selection of objects and pick one.

Each object is a symbol of a potential future career and they will usually include Rosery Beads to symbolise a religious calling, a hardboiled egg predicts the child will have a life of prosperity, calculator for a financial career, stethoscope for a career in medicine and so on. Obviously, some of these items have been added since the tradition started in the 18th century, also traditionally boys and girls would be presented with stereotypical gender "appropriate" items but nowadays they would be both have the same options. As a child ages more religious ceremonies are celebrated, one of the most notable is the first Holy communion similarly to the Baptism the child will be dressed in angel-like robes, next comes the confirmation which is usually followed by a big party.

Weddings are also a huge deal in Malta with most people opting for a lavish do, being a Roman Catholic country, most people have strong feelings on only being married once so if you should get it right the first time and celebrate accordingly. Although Maltese Weddings are usually lavish they still follow the traditional format, the ceremony is held in a church followed by a party/ dinner in a hall or garden/ The bride and groom give small tokens of appreciation to the guests, usually including sugar coated almond sweets (Perlini) and food is one of the most important part of the day.

IL-QUCCIJA

A Tradition that Continues to Delight Maltese Families

shutterstock.com · 2610057371

The 'Quccija' is one of the few Maltese traditions that has stood the test of time. Previously, the term referred to a somber tradition where Maltese families would donate food to the needy in memory of a deceased relative. This practice dates to the 18th century it takes place at a child's first birthday party, in an attempt to predict the child's future profession by incorporating objects symbolising various professions, trades or lifestyles on a tray or basket for a child to crawl towards. The first object the child selects is believed to foretell their future.

Boys used to be given distinct items in comparison to their female counterparts, which reflected more archaic views on gender and occupation. For instance, boys were given conventional tools, whereas girls were handed kitchenware or crochet hooks. Modern versions of the 'Quccija' incorporate many of the same items for both boys and girls. Family members are allowed to verbally encourage the child to crawl towards the tray and make their choice. The items used in the Quccija have changed over time, with more modern objects representing contemporary occupations.

For instance, if a child picks an academic book, parents are congratulated on their unborn child's future college degree. A football represents the child's potential for athletic success, while the Artist Coloring Book encourages the child's creative expression. The Comb represents a potential career in hairstyling, while Cash represents the child's potential for asset management. The Musical Instrument suggests a career in music, while the Aircraft suggests a potential career in aviation. A Chef's pots represent a love of cooking and culinary skills, while the Rosary Bead represents a potential career in religious service. The Toothbrush represents a future career as a dentist, while the Equipment represents potential knowledge and skills in various mechanical systems. Fortunately, this tradition does not have any rigid guidelines. One can anticipate seeing family members make several last-minute adjustments to the tray, causing the other party guests to fall into hilarity at the calculated repositioning.

The Maltese tradition of the 'Quccija' is a unique and entertaining custom that has been celebrated for generations. Although similar traditions are observed in some far-flung areas of Italy, Greece, and Sicily, it is not as prevalent there as it is in Malta. The locals take great pride in preserving the history and values of their ancestors by passing down customs and rituals from generation to generation. Thus, by embracing their traditions, the Maltese continue to create meaningful connections with their past and present, shaping the future for generations to come. If you mention the tradition of the 'Quccija' to any of the locals, they will surely have plenty of stories to share about the items picked by their child or a close relative during the celebratory event.

SURVIVED THE TITANIC AND DIED IN MALTA

ALLEN MARDEN BAGGOTT

Allen Mardon Baggott was born in Stepney, Middlesex, England on 13 April 1884. He was the son of William Baggott (1847-1908) and Susan Lake (1844-1914). At the time of his baptism on 12 June 1884 in St Thomas' Church, Stepney, his parents were resident at 41 Johnson Street, Stepney and his father was a dock labourer. His father hailed from Suffolk and his mother from Devon and he had two known siblings: Elizabeth Ann (b. 1874), William Henry (b. 1880).

Allen first shows up on the 1901 census and at that time the family were living at 2 New Basin, Shadwell, London. His father passed away in 1908 and his mother went to live with her married daughter Elizabeth Tibbenham. She passed away in Essex in 1914.

Allen was married in Stepney in late 1905 to Hannah Buck (b. 11 November 1883 in Sunderland, Durham).

On the 1911 census Allen is absent but his wife is resident at 38

St Mary's Place, Southampton. The record indicates that they have had six children in total, with four living past infancy: Nancy Eileen (b. 1905), Robert Allen (1906-1994), William Mardon (1907-1968) and Irene Nancy (b. 1910). A further two children would be born later George (b. 1911) and Bessie (1913-1999).

When he signed-on to the Titanic, on 4 April 1912, Allen gave his address at 106 Park Road, Itchen (Southampton). He had previously worked as a Chief Steward but on the Titanic he was employed as a first-class steward. As such he received £3.15s monthly wages. His last ship had been the Oceanic. He came aboard the Titanic on 10 April.

Baggott was rescued in lifeboat 9. Allen returned to Southampton and resumed a career at sea, later serving in the Royal Fleet Auxiliary in the early 1920s on the RFA Perthshire as chief steward. It was during this time that his alcoholism became apparent, and he appears on the ship's log on numerous occasions for drunkenness and disorderly conduct. On one such occasion in Constantinople in November 1920 he reported for duty at a British Naval Base whilst inebriated. The base Captain ordered his detention on HMS Heliotrope and he was released three days later and returned to the Perthshire.

Arriving in Grand Harbour, Malta several weeks later, Allen Baggott suddenly took ill following a seizure. He died 15 February 1921 whilst en route to the Royal Naval Hospital ashore, and was buried on 21 February 1921 and was buried in Ta' Braxia cemetery, Malta in an unmarked

LOGO AND MOTTO RELEASED FOR POPE LEO'S VISIT TO SPAIN

The Holy See Press Office has released the logo and motto for Pope Leo XIV's Apostolic Journey to Spain, which will take place from 6-12 June.

The logo

The logo is designed as an open circle in motion, formed by human figures joined together and oriented upward.

The emblem expresses community, encounter and mutual support.

This does not mean only being together, but also walking together toward a common purpose.

The Virgin Mary, placed at the center, represents the heart of the movement - a maternal presence that welcomes and directs every gaze toward God, as a sign of unity and hope for all people.

The motto

The chosen motto, “Lift up your eyes” (Jn 4:35), is an invitation to look beyond our daily concerns and rediscover the presence of God while opening ourselves to others.

It is a call to hope and contemplation, encouraging people to go beyond themselves and to rediscover unity, beauty and charity as concrete expressions of a shared life.

This gesture of “lifting up our eyes” also expresses the attitude with which the Church in Spain welcomes the Holy Father’s visit: with open hearts, ready to walk forward together

Animals have been slaughtered for meat in the Maltese islands since time immemorial. Medieval Archives document the existence of legislation on the slaughtering of animals, including on standards on how these should be presented for sale, who is authorised to slaughter animals, where it can be sold and so on and so forth.

During the Hospitaller Period, Grand Master Jean Lascaris Castellar (1636-1657) mandated that all butchering should be done in Valletta, in the area around what was then known as the 'Gran Fontana' (this was a fountain built on the site where the Hospitallers had, way back in May 1566 discovered by chance a natural spring in what is now St Christopher Street facing Old Mint Street). The same grandmaster also built eight magazines in Saint Christopher's Street, four on each side of the road leading to Jews Sally Port, for use as part of the slaughterhouse. By 1667, the eight magazines were divided into two chambers each to form a total of 16. The said Gran Fontana changed its name to 'Fontana della Bucieria' (biččeriġa), from the old slaughterhouse building still standing to the rear of the fountain.

An abattoir has been established and functioning in Albert Town Marsa since 1897 – actually on the site there were both civil and military abattoirs. Over the years, the Abattoir has however undergone major renovations. Parts of this abattoir had been demolished and reconstructed again in 1974, other parts of the building have been recognised as industrial archaeological heritage and hence they have been restored, and recently added to the list of Scheduled properties. Further upgrades were made in the 1980s as well as in the period leading to the accession of Malta to the European Union, when the Abattoir was upgraded to EU standards. In 2008, a €1 million cutting and deboning plant financed by the Italian Fifth Framework Protocol was inaugurated to enable further cutting and packaging of meat from carcasses slaughtered at the Public Abattoir.

Over the last few years, the Government has embarked on a multi-year project which saw the investment of more than EUR 11 million to renovate the slaughterlines and processing equipment, improving levels of hygiene, launch new cutting and deboning facilities for swine and beef, and increasing digitization of the different processes.

MALTESE IN CANADA

With an estimated 40,000+ people of Maltese descent in Canada, the community is highly concentrated in Toronto—particularly in "Little Malta" on Dundas Street West—with notable groups in Montreal, Winnipeg, and Vancouver. Active since the early 20th century, the community holds strong cultural ties, hosting annual festivals (Caravan), traditional feasts, and operating social clubs like the Maltese-Canadian Society of Toronto.

Key Aspects of the Maltese-Canadian Community

- Concentration & "Little Malta": Over 50% of the population lives in Toronto, where the area of Dundas Street West near Gilmour Avenue is known as "Little Malta," featuring Maltese businesses, social clubs, and a dedicated church (St. Paul the Apostle).
- Active Cultural Life: The community is kept alive through organizations like the Maltese-Canadian Society of Toronto (MCST) and the Maltese Canadian Federation, which promote music, food, language lessons, and religious festivals.
- History: Early immigration started around 1910-1920, but the largest waves settled after World War II, bringing young families and laborers seeking better opportunities.
- Current Efforts: There is a strong focus on engaging younger generations to maintain the culture, with support from organizations like the Maltese-Canadian Club of London and community initiatives.

Maltese immigrants have generally integrated well into Canadian society while preserving their distinctive traditions and tight-knit social networks. Al

The victims were Philip Cassar (Ta Simillu), 37 years old), Anthony Debono (Tal-Paradajs), 29 years old), John Mary Farrugia (il-Bibillu), 37 years old), and Philip Xuereb (ta Lilel), 52 years old), four fire craftsmen members of the Musical Society, Banda San Philep Club. While Farrugia and Debono died immediately and were taken out from under the crash barely recognizable, Cassar and Xuereb died the next day in San Luqa hospital.

Two days after this tragedy, on Easter Saturday, April 9, 1955, their funeral took place. The Banda San Philep accompanied them to the grave in the cemetery of the Sacred Heart, Zebbuġ. As a sign of respect that year the feast of Saint Philip had no fireworks, no scaffolding and no band. Several societies from other villages accompanied with the standards.

In 2005 there was also a procession to their grave in the cemetery of the Heart of Jesus.

The relatives and neighbours of the victims took part in it together with many members and officials of the Association Kazin Banda San Filep. The memory of this tragedy is still alive among the people of Zebbuġ to this day!

8 APRIL 1941: MINE EXPLOSION KILLS 28 MALTESE DOCKYARD MEN

ONLY ONE SURVIVOR AS DOCKYARD VESSEL MOOR BLOWS UP

A working dockyard vessel was blown up today at the entrance to Grand Harbour. 28 of the 29 man crew were killed. The Admiralty Mooring Vessel Moor was carrying out maintenance work on the boom-defence nets protecting the harbour entrance. Shortly after 5.00pm, as the vessel started its engine to return to the dockyard, a deafening explosion shook buildings across the harbour area. People rushed to the Bastions, only to watch as the vessel turned over on her side and rapidly sank.

A ferry boat, several Naval Dockyard and Air Force pinnaces and many dghajsas raced to the scene. Only one survivor, diver/rigger Anthony Mercieca, was plucked from the water by a Naval vessel and taken to Bighi Royal Naval Hospital.

Mr Mercieca later described his escape. He was blown into the air inside the ship's cabin, before plunging about twenty feet under water. He struggled to force open the jammed cabin door and managed to surface, while debris from the vessel was still flying about.
